SUMMER COURSE

Ius migrandi. History, Concept and Limits

---

Palermo, 4th – 12th June 2012

The Summer Course on “Ius migrandi. History, Concept and Limits” has been organized by the University of Palermo PhD Program on Human Rights jointly with the Brussels Academy of Legal Theory, the renowned research centre in the field of Philosophy of Law.

Key concept. It is a fact that our time is an age of migration and mobility. At the same time, this is the age of human rights. On one hand, the protection of individuals through human rights seems to imply getting away from an exclusive territorial logic for legal and political institutions. On the other hand, states (and their linked citizenship as a privilege based on luck) appear to be the only tools able to guarantee basic needs for individuals. From this perspective, limitations for immigration are reasonable and unreasonable at the same time.

Objectives. We would analyze critically some aspects of this contrast. First, we would map some consequences of it and emphasize risks for the protection of human rights. Second, we would go deep in examining justifications and reasons of opposite trends evident in the evolution of political institutions and public policies (the tension toward global justice and the prevalence of localism, for instance). Third, we would look for instruments able to reform intolerable iniquities.

Methodology. Historical, conceptual and critical approaches will be composed together. The historical approach to the problem will permit not to trash important knowledge and experiences deriving from the history of law and political institutions, given that the problem of migrations and the instruments for integration are not new. From this point of view, it will be easier to adopt a flexible perspective in order to situate current emergencies and urgencies.

Topics. The investigation would face different dimensions of the problem. Some of them: the evolution from the “ius migrandi” as a fundamental individual right to the “migration offence”, introduced recently in some European countries; the reciprocal influence among mobility, poverty and market; the link between migrations and political instability; the new equilibrium between state sovereignty and immigration policies.

Lectures will be followed by debates. Lecturers are professors from Italian or foreign Universities. The Summer Course will be hosted by the Dipartimento Studi su Politica, Diritto e Società (DPDS), piazza Bologni 8, 90134 Palermo. Teaching hours will be 10.00 a.m. till 1.00 p.m. and 3.30 p.m. till 6.30 p.m. Students will receive the materials sent by lecturers, and they will have free access to the Library of the DPDS, as well as to the other libraries of the Law Faculty.

Working languages: English, French, Spanish and Italian

Applications, Conditions of admissions and Certificate of attendance

If a selection will be necessary (if more than 30 applications will be received) the scientific committee will redact a list and a reserve list.
