Citazioni e riferimenti bibliografici

Time and again ethnic autobiographers remain fascinated by the glory of the immigrant narrative; so much so that the spiritual power those “original donors” (Godelier, 1999: 52) radiate can best be gauged by its effect on their descendants. And by power, again we are referring to the role of “the accursed share” (Bataille, 1991) that both Yeziarska and Uchida identified when underscoring their parents’ extreme abjection. For ethnic subjects, power is ranked according to the rule of sacrifice, and sacrifice in turn gives us the measure of sovereignty.

In generale . . .

La “online search” permette di effettuare ricerche bibliografiche nei cataloghi di tantissime biblioteche (eg. COPAC) e alcuni database online direttamente con EndNote Web.

- I database non sono accessibili da ENW ad eccezione di Web of Science, Project Muse e pochi altri
- E` meglio effettuare la ricerca sui database e poi importare le citazioni in ENW

Bibliographic Fields:

Reference Type:	Journal Article
Author:	Barone, Dennis
Title:	Machines are us: Joseph Papaleo and the
Year:	2008
Journal:	Forum Italicum
Volume:	42
Issue:	1
Pages:	99-113

Optional Fields:

Abstract:	This essay examines the work of Italian American fiction writer Joseph Papaleo in the context of suburbanization, globalization, and ethnic heritage and identity. In doing so I demonstrate that Papaleo's fiction provides understanding of how Italian Americans have looked at Italy as they experienced the alienation of a consumer culture. Papaleo's fiction presents a mixed nostalgia for what Italy represents and recognition that it, too, like the United States, confronts continuous auto-dependent sprawl. Papaleo adds a suburban focus to the more frequently urban-centered literature of Italian Americans and he adds an ethnic perspective to the predominantly Anglo American literature of the suburbs. His 1970 novel Out of Place depicts a materially successful Italian American, Gene Santoro, who cannot fill a deeper spiritual need in either the United States or Italy.
