SUMMER COURSE

Identity, Rights, and Pluralism
Diritti, identità e pluralismo

Palermo, 6th – 11th June 2011

The Summer Course on “Diversity and Human Rights” has been organized by the University of Palermo PhD Program on Human Rights jointly with the Brussels Academy of Legal Theory, the renowned research centre in the field of Philosophy of Law.

Identity is a key concept in human rights discourse and practice. Identity can be defined as the set of characteristics that makes a certain person unique or, at any rate, himself. Obviously enough, such a definition is bound to raise rather than solve many problems: individuating what makes any person him or herself, or of what makes that person the same person over time, is one of the most intriguing problems in the whole history of philosophy, as well as it is debated in many social and human sciences such as anthropology, sociology, and political philosophy. One important strand in this reflection is the relation between identity and the environment – or, to what extent is identity shaped by tradition, culture, and society?

In recent debates on the issue of identity, several important points have been emphasized. In the first place, anti-essentialism: personal identity is not an immutable and necessary trait, something one has by nature. Rather, it is a social and cultural construction, it is something one develops over time and chooses more or less deliberately. Personal identity, then, is the upshot of a process, and it is always revisable: it is a process of identification. Identification is the process of ‘connecting’ oneself to a collective identity or, to put it crudely, to a ‘label’. Such a label is provided by the relevant social environment, where some cultural, religious, and generally social norms are to be found; moreover, it is the relevant social environment that assigns a specific meaning to some ‘natural’ identity traits, such as gender, race, ethnic origin. At the same time, the law is a factor that can shape identity, since it can try to favour some identities and to marginalize others – this is what happens, for instance, with the citizens/aliens divide.

Lectures will be followed by debates. Lecturers are professors from Italian or foreign Universities. The Summer Course will be hosted by the Dipartimento Studi su Politica, Diritto e Società (DPDS), piazza Bologna 8, 90134 Palermo. Teaching hours will be 10.00 a.m. till 1.00 p.m. and 3.30 p.m. till 6.30 p.m. Students will receive the materials sent by lecturers, and they will have free access to the Library of the DPDS, as well as to the other libraries of the Law Faculty.

Working languages: English, French.

Applications, Conditions of admissions and Certificate of attendance

As established by the Regolamento d'Ateneo of the University of Palermo, the Course is open to students holding a first or second level Master degree, PhD students, PhD, Researchers with an interest in legal theory and able to orientate themselves in the subject matters of the courses. No more than 30 applications will be accepted, and at least 15 participants will be selected among applicants from other Italian or foreign Universities. Only in the case in which less than 15 people would apply, more applications from the University of Palermo will be taken into consideration. The Summer Course will not be held if there will be less than 10 applications. Every applicant shall fill the form here attached, adding his/her CV. If a selection will be necessary (if more than 30 applications will be received) the scientific committee will redact a list and a reserve list. Students from the reserve list will be contacted in the case in which students admitted in the list will withdraw.

Students who will have attended at least 90% of the seminar hours will receive a certificate, corresponding to 6 ECTS, after passing a test.
