AREAS OF SPECIALIZATION

Transient test-based techniques for the analysis of pipe system performance throughout the urban environment (fault detection);

Modeling of transients in pressurized pipe systems: unsteady friction simulation, viscoelastic effects in polymeric pipes, 2-D models and local velocity measurement;

Devices for pressure wave generation and their use in real pipe systems;

Leak-law for leakage evaluation;

Pumping optimization;

Pressure control by PRVs.

In two early representative works (Brunone et al, 1991a; 1991b), an unsteady friction (UF) model based on the idea that unsteady shear stress can be modeled using the mean local and convective accelerations of the fluid has been proposed. Such a model has been found to be superior to many other models and still to maintain simplicity from the computational point of view of the equations in which the unsteady friction is evaluated by means of uniform flow formulas (i.e., the steady-state approach). Such a model is the most representative within the so-called Instantaneous Acceleration Based (IAB) ones. It has been found to be a basis of much follow-on research as proven by the large number of citations of the papers where such an UF model was proposed (Brunone et al, 1991a; 1991b; 1995); it is worthy of noting that some papers refer to it even in their title (e.g., Li et al, 2011; Yao et al, 2014).

In another pioneering work (Brunone et al, 2000), the velocity profiles in an unsteady pipe flow using the ultrasonic technique have been measured. This work has provided some much required experimental evidence which is of great importance to the development of a better understanding of the unsteady pipe flow and its modeling.

Starting with the very pioneering work (Brunone, 1989) — at that time the use of transients for leak detection was very innovative — transient test-based techniques for pipe fault (e.g., leaks, partially closed in-line valves, and partial blockages) detection have been explored both in laboratory and real pipe systems. With the aim of generating save pressure waves, the Portable Pressure Wave Maker (PPWM) device has been refined at the Water Engineering Laboratory of the University of Perugia (Brunone et al, 2008). At the 2016 H<sub>2</sub>O Water International Exhibition of Bologna (Italy), the PPWM received the "sustainability award".

To confirm the role played in the field of pipe system management, Bruno Brunone (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EVb27V7JXig>) is one of 47 respondents — engineers, modelers, researchers and practitioners — who have made significant contributions to the development of the field of the Water Distribution Systems Analysis (WDSA) within the WDSA History Project, sponsored by the Environmental and Water Resources Institute (EWRI).

The valuable results of the research in the four-year period 2011-2014 is proved by the fact that in the analysis of the research quality for such a period of time (VQR 2011-2014) executed by the Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research (MIUR), the Hydraulics team of the University of Perugia occupies the first place in Italy.

Bruno Brunone has been the President of the Organizing Committee of important International Conferences: 2013 - Computing and Control for the Water Industry - CCWI2013, Perugia; 2014: Water Distribution System Analysis - WDSA2014, Bari; 2015: 7th Groundwater Symposium of the International Association for Hydro-Environment Engineering and Research (IAHR), Perugia. He is the founder and President of the Organizing Committee of the biennial Italian Conferences on Pipe System Management (seven editions; University of Perugia: 2003, 2005, 2007; the Second University of Napoli: 2009; Sapienza University of Rome, and ACEA: 2011; University of Trento: 2015; University of Cassino and Southern Lazio: 2017). Brunone is an Associate Editor of the J. of Hydraulic Engineering of the American Society of Civil Engineers ASCE, a member of the Editorial Board of Water, The Open Civil Engineering Journal, and the Italian Journal Servizi a Rete.
