The selection is carried out through the evaluation of academic qualification and interview. Up to 70 points may be awarded to qualifications and up to 30 points to the interview. To be admitted to the interview, candidates must achieve at least 40 points out of 70 points for the qualifications. The interview is considered passed by candidates who have achieved at least 10 out of 30 available points.

The Commission forms the merit ranking in decreasing order, adding the score of the qualifications to that of the interview.

For the purposes of awarding grants, a research doctorate or, for the sectors concerned, a qualification in the medical area accompanied by adequate scientific production is a preferential qualification.

In the event of equal merit, preference will be given to the female candidate and, subordinately, to the one with a younger age.

TITLE	Role of intestinal microbiota in regulating the epigenetic landscape in colorectal cancer stem cells (CR-CSC)
DESCRIPTION	Colorectal cancer (CRC) is one of the most common neoplasia worldwide and it causes more than 900,000 deaths every year. Changes in the intestinal microbiota composition have been observed in CRC patients compared with healthy subjects. Moreover, specific bacterial species have been correlated to an increased risk of CRC development, including E. coli. Here we propose to investigate the role of intestinal microbiota dysbiosis in regulating the epigenetic landscape in colorectal CSC (CR-CSC) compartment, thus leading to CRC tumorigenesis. Elucidating the microbiota-mediated epigenetic mechanisms in CR-CSCs responsible for tumorigenesis and progression will pave the way to the identification of potential molecular targets and to design novel therapeutic approaches for the treatment of advanced CRC patients.

TITLE	A novel Synthetic lethality Approach exploiting error prone DNA repair: an emerging scenario for HRD tumors Treatment the STARDUST study
DESCRIPTION	The aim is to investigate the role of proteins other than PARP1 that play a key role in promoting synthetic lethality and consider them as targets for molecularly targeted therapy in breast and ovarian cancers. Cancer leads to a high frequency of DNA damage, caused by replicative and metabolic stress. To survive, cancer cells utilize error-prone systems, increasing the mutation rate that supports disease progression and resistance. The alternative non-homologous end joining (Alt-NHEJ) pathway is considered a major player in this process. In fact, the up-regulation of key Alt-NHEJ components, such as LIG3, POLQ, and PARP1, occurs in various tumors, where they are associated with disease progression and resistance. We hypothesize that the synthetic lethality approach for HRD cancer could be enhanced by targeting error-prone DNA repair pathways. Alt-NHEJ plays a crucial role in this context, and the selective interference with its driver components like LIG1/LIG3 could represent a promising therapeutic opportunity for HRD tumors.

TITLE	Study of low-frequency variants identified in hereditary cancer genes to recognize impact of constitutional mosaicism for patients' management
DESCRIPTION	The high sensitivity of NGS produced unusual genetic findings that pose new challenges for patient management. A heterozygous constitutional variant is expected to be detected with NGS at a 50% read frequency. However, variants may be identified with NGS at significantly different frequencies that, in the 5–30% range, are generally filtered out as low-quality data. Mosaicism is a well-known mechanism for hereditary cancer-associated genes, and it is now increasingly known that a part of tumor predisposition syndrome patients may go undiagnosed, because of the limits of current NGS analysis. With these premises, the study aims improving current knowledge about low-frequency allele variants (low-VAF) in NGS data. This study could shed light if mosaics might be more represented in sporadic breast/ovarian cancer cases among those tested with hereditary cancer NGS panels.

TITLE	Effect of Heat-not-burn tobacco (IQOS) versus Electronic and Tobacco cigarettes on the oral health.
DESCRIPTION	The researcher will carry out investigations aimed at assessing the effects of IQOS and e-cig aerosol or TS on the oral cavity microvessel changes and the qualitative and quantitative chemical aerosol composition. The microvessel changes will be evaluated by intraoral video-capillaroscopy, a non-invasive imaging method, useful for the early diagnosis of oral diseases associated with these changes. Currently this technique plays an essential role in the screening of immuno-rheumatological and microangiopathies and of risk factors for the oral mucosa. In particular, static (or morphological) parameters will be examined (loops visibility, orientation with respect to the surface, presence of microhemorrhages, characteristic capillaries morphology, capillary loop length, diameter, tortuosity and density) together with functional (or dynamic) parameters (continuous, grainy or intermittent flow). The obtained results will provide new evidences on the effect of IQOS, e-cig and TS on microvessel changes. Moreover, the qualitative and quantitative chemical composition of aerosol will be evaluated by gas or liquid chromatography, combined with mass spectrometry (GC/MS or LC/MS). This procedure initially will evaluate any chemical difference between the composition of aerosols of the three devices obtained by the smoke machine. Then the next step will evaluate the exhaled by the patients after using the device, involving the qualitative assessment of the breath that will allow to highlight any discrepancy between the types of aerosols in the different smoke systems, and then connect the persistence of some chemically active components in the mucous membranes and/or in the microcirculation. The vapor/smoke exhaled will be collected directly in one 3-L Tedlar bag and then the Volatile Organic Compounds (VOCs) sampled will analyze by Solid Phase MicroExtraction (SPME)-GC/MS. A sample of saliva and/or oral mucosa scrub of each enrolled subject will be appropriately stored for the detection of MGGS and OS-related protein and/or metabolites. These analyses will be correlated with possible microvessel changes in each patient to point out the potential prognostic value of the considered agents. 80 subjects, aged 18-40 years, equally distributed between males and females that do not take drugs and free from systemic pathologies and clinically detectable oral mucous membrane alterations will be enrolled

	(Palermo University Ethic Committee n. 1/2021 Policlinico Paolo Giaccone). Individuals with prosthetic products containing metal or intra-oral devices (orthodontic devices, bytes) will be excluded from the study. All the subjects clinical and personal records will be gathered in a detailed questionnaire. The subjects will be divided into 4 sub-groups: never smoked, IQOS, e-cig and tobacco-cigarettes (at least 10 cigarettes/die by 3 months and no previous history of e-cigarette use) smokers. The results on the effects of IQOS on human oral health compared to that of e-cigs and TS will be disseminated, by means of workshops organization, to secondary school and undergraduate students who are the major users of these devices. The goal is to sensitize students about the general risk of using IQOS, ecig and TS.
