Kore University of Enna & Municipality of Aidone

The Faculty of Engineering and Architecture at the ARKA Lab in Aidone offers the opportunity of a full-time research and didactic experience in enhancing urban & territorial heritage through Integrated Relational Tourism. An activity focused on the issue of Urban Design for Urban Spaces in Aidone/Morgantina as an opportunity aimed to improve the quality of life so as the local economic development for the communities of the inland rural areas.

The Kore International Winter School 2015, represents a continuous of activities as interviews and meetings, workshops and expositions, lectures and site visits that, through 8 full days of common work, should explore problems and hopefully propose a range of visions for the future of the city and of the hinterland of Aidone-Morgantina and its heritage.

The Kore International Winter School 2015 includes field trips and guided visits to the study site of Aidone and Morgantina, Piazza Armerina and Villa del Casale, Enna and Pergusa areas as well as social and cultural events.

The School activities are articulated on three structural goals, which are:

- the activity of scientific and applied Research, implicit in the proposed innovative approach as in the chosen application field;
- the integrated project implementation Scenarios, as expected design results by the workshop;
- the Training for new needed professionals, important to manage the transition to a different development model from the current one.

Official and work languages

Official language: English (for meetings, lectures, exhibitions, etc.)

Work languages: Arabic and Italian (for any other informal relationships!)

Short Presentation

The Winter School aims to promote a trans-disciplinary and international approach that encourages the development of skills and knowledge in the field of Integrated Tourism managed by the territory through its local actors and resources. An approach that can provide a niche market that can mean a real and substantial alternative market for the products and the processes of the tradition; today under risk of "extinction" because considered, for various reasons, out of the ordinary market.

The core idea is that the Integrated Tourism and the Inland Territories can give insights and innovative opportunities in the cultural heritage, agro-food and handcraft sectors by promoting a range of activities such as educational farms, urban gardens, urban quality spaces, widespread accommodation activities, rural tourism, Km 0 catering and so on. An innovative approach to the urban design themes for the open urban spaces that can help this process also considering of the interaction and its role between real spaces and virtual ones in the current digital age.

The issues involved, in a trans-disciplinary vision, may be the urban design, the architecture, the design for the craft but also for the public space, the tourism, the archeology, etc.

The study case chosen is the city and the territory of Aidone, rural area of the interior of Sicily, currently the margins of development but (as many similar places in the Mediterranean “world”) particularly rich in values, products and processes maintained by ancient rural traditions (wheat, bread, olive oil, dairy products, dry fruit, etc.). An area and a local community also guardians of a cultural heritage of exceptional character (the old city of Morgantina, the “Goddess of Morgantina”, the procession of St. Philip, the culture and language of old Gallo-Italic, etc.). The pre-Greek, Greek, Roman and Arab periods in Sicily are very well represented in its center and even more in Aidone-Morgantina.

The case chosen also lends itself to some interesting comparisons and parallelisms with some well known Egyptian realities (Rashid, Luxor, El Fayoum, etc.).

The activities of the School will be held at the Faculty of Engineering and Architecture of Enna to its “ARKA Lab” in Aidone.

Note: Considering the attributes of the Winter School activities it is strictly suggested to bring your own laptop. Internet connection will be provided by the School.
