In this event, which is co-organized between the University of Oxford's Border Criminologies and the University of Palermo's Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence EUMoSIT, we invite speakers to reflect on the state of trafficking and anti-trafficking, with a view to imagining alternatives. After twenty years of action, considerable concerns remain about the efficacy and nature of anti-trafficking policies. The field of study, though vibrant, is structured by enduring debates over definitions, scale and impact. So, too, notwithstanding important global alliances, voices from specific regions are not always included. In this event, we seek to take stock of where we are, in policy and in scholarship, and look ahead.
