Aging is one of the main health-related challenges in the world. The healthcare costs in many countries are very high because of the increased number of unhealthy populations and the consequent increase of severe age-related disabilities. This is a challenging problem for society, especially for the high cost of the health-care system.

Technology can improve these expenses through the collaboration of multidisciplinary teams and its use is increasing also among the older population. eHealth is one of the fastest growing sectors of the market and could be used locally, nationally or globally by health professionals, such as nurses, to promote and strengthen the health systems.
