

The master degree in Italianistics aims to provide a deep disciplinary preparation and adequate tools to train experts in Italian culture, language and literature. The course is structured in order to allow students to consolidate and expand their knowledge and skills, improving their philology, linguistic, historical-literary skills.

At the end of course, students will have the necessary critical orientation skills in historical-literary phenomena and in the analysis of texts; they will have acquired solid skills in the communicative practice of writing and orality, and they will be able to produce and manage oral texts and professional writings in the field of Italian Linguistics and Literature.

Graduated students will be able to combine the solid knowledge provided by their subject field (LM-14) with new knowledge, in constant dialogue with other disciplines and with the use of new technologies. The programme of the course is also to provide theoretical, critical and methodological competencies aimed to form professionals able to operate in national and international cultural environments.

Moreover the course provide to give the appropriate skills to prepare students in the field of teaching or concerning research and organization and management of cultural events.

It proposes also to link the Italian linguistic and literary tradition with the European one, and with the founding junctions of the respective traditions, thus favoring the classical (fundamentally Latin) and Romance inheritance.